Who are the architects you most admire and why? Edwin Lutyens for his creativity, Quinlan Terry for his commitment to classicism, and Thomas Jefferson for helping develop a truly American architecture from its European roots.

Do you practice only in Fairfield County? We love working in a variety of areas. Aside from our Fairfield County work, we are currently designing homes in Rye, New York City, Rockland County and Denmark.

When you are working in a new location outside of Fairfield County, how do you become familiar with its regulations as well as its culture?

Almost all towns now have a website where zoning and other regulations can be accessed. That gives us a general idea, but we will always meet with local officials early in our process to confirm that we're not missing anything. For local context there is no substitute for spending time in the area and on the site.

Describe your team. We are an eleven person firm with a variety of backgrounds and talents from historic preservation and landscape design to classicism and architectural interiors.

We also collaborate with a talented team of consultants in lighting, energy conservation and interior design.

What makes a project GREAT?

"Good" is working closely with a client to provide a beautiful and inspiring place for them to live. "Great" is when years later they are just as happy.... and people are still commenting on how beautiful the home is.

What's the best part of your job?

The creative process of architecture. I'll describe an idea to clients through pencil sketches, refine the details in technical drawings and scale models, and eventually guide the design through construction. For me, this series of drawing, client interaction and on-site collaboration is as fulfilling as the finished product.
